From: Katie Cooper <cooperK@gru.edu> To: Dorothy Cooper <dorothycoop@cmail.com> Date: October 10 Subject: Thanks for visiting

Dear Aunt Dorothy,

Thank you for visiting me last weekend at my new apartment. It's been a little difficult for me to adjust to life in college, so it was really nice to see you. I hope your drive home was not too long. I know traffic this time of year can be bad.

I really appreciate you for taking me out for shopping. The new bookshelf you bought me is so nice! I'm sure it will be full of books soon. It is much better than keeping all of my books in my closet. My collection has grown so much since I came to college. My classes require so many books because I am an English major. Next month we will start studying Shakespeare so I have started buying many of his books.

I wanted to also ask you about the apple pie you brought with you. It was so delicious! My roommates and I enjoyed it so much. Mixing strawberries in with the apples was a good idea. It is already gone! I would like to make one myself to share with my friends. Could you send me the recipe you used to make it? Thank you again for visiting.

Hope to see you soon, Katie

An award for a good man

Dikembe Mutombo was a basketball player in America and has been known for his charity activities outside the basketball career. He was born on June 25, 1966 in Congo and he was the seventh child in a big family. He came to the United States to study when he was 21 years old. At first, he wanted to be a doctor. During his college days, he started playing basketball. The basketball coach asked him to play with the team. Soon after he started playing basketball, he showed his talent for basketball. He was able to block many shots. However, he was not only playing basketball, but also studied hard and worked in the American government.

Mutombo was a very tall man and was one of the top defenders. He was so tall that he was sometimes called Mt. Mutombo. He won many awards for blocking but he was also able to get points. Mutombo received the Silver Anniversary Awards for 2016. The awards are given to six former *NCAA players who are chosen by NCAA. Every year, winners are chosen after 25 years from their college graduation for their excellent play while in college and professional teams. But he received the award not only for his basketball play.

In 1997, Mutombo started his charity activities to help people in his home country, *Democratic Republic of Congo. His efforts were widely known and he received the President's Service Awards in 1999. The award is given by the American President for people that worked in charity activities. In 2004, he joined the "Basketball Without Borders" program with other famous basketball players to teach basketball and to improve people's life. So Mutombo is not only famous for being a good basketball player but also widely known as a man with a big heart. * Democratic Republic of Congo: コンゴ民主共和国
